Relative Pronouns

Relative pronouns are used to connect a relative clause to another part of a sentence and have the job of introducing the relative clause. The term "relative" pronoun is used because it "relates" to the word it is modifying. The relative pronouns are that, which, whom, who, and whose.

Read each sentence carefully and write the relative pronoun that introduces the clause.

- Duke's younger brother, _____ piano recital you've heard, is going to take the professional lessons this summer.
- The girl, _____ won a gold medal in the 100 meters race, has been practicing for many months.
- The book _____ Mr. Hansen was writing is ready for publication.
- The police is looking for the car _____ driver was going at 50 miles in the school zone.
- This is the project _____ secured the top position in the national science fair.
- Mrs. Robertson consulted the physician _____ she met in California last summer.
- The scarf, _____ Jacquelyn gifted me on my birthday, is of an excellent quality.
- The toddlers, _____ she babysits on weekends, are quite handful.
- The seamstress, _____ sew Angolina's dress, is very well known for her fine work.
- Our neighbor's dog, _____ bark could wake up the entire town is finally moving to the new place.

Reflexive and Intensive Pronouns

When you are done, try the Reflexive and Intensive Pronouns Quiz.

Reflexive and intensive pronouns are the words myself, yourself, himself, herself, itself, ourselves, yourselves, themselves. These words are classified or grouped as reflexive depending on how they are used in sentences. In the examples below the reflexive and intensive pronouns are in italics.

Reflexive pronouns refer back to the subject of a sentence:

- I gave myself plenty of time to get to work.
- You should let yourself into the house.
- Jim bought himself a shirt.
- Jill read to herself.
- The dog scratched itself.
- We treated ourselves to pizza.
- You can make yourselves at home.
- The children are able to dress themselves.

Intensive pronouns are the same words used to smphasize the subject of the sentence. Intensive pronouns usually appear right near the subject of the sentence.

- I myself am sick of the heat.
- You yourself are responsible for this mess!
- The president himself appeared at the rally.
- The actress herself wrote those lines.
- The cat itself caught the mouse.
- We ourselves made the meal.
- You yourselves can win this game.
- The troops themselves helped the people escape the burning building.

Pronouns are words that take the place of nouns. They minimize redundancy in language. For example, instead of saying, "John went to John's house because John's mom wanted John home," one can say, "John went to his house because his mom wanted him home." Pronouns save a lot of syllables. However, mastering pronouns can be difficult. One must learn to identify subjective, objective, and possessive cases. One must learn to avoid using vague pronouns, or pronouns with unclear antecedents. And often, all of this must be done on the fly, while one is speaking. I have created many pronoun worksheets, resources, and activities over the years. These resources have been made freely available to you. I hope that this helps.
